System 3000

The Marsh family business started in Dover, Ohio in 1914 with the formation of the Marsh Lumber Company. Following World War I, the company experienced a period of rapid growth and purchased an abandoned lumber yard to manufacture wood products for flooring, car decking and interior trim. Through the decades, the company dropped and added divisions and partnered with other corporations. In 1958, the Marsh Chalkboard Division was started and was the origin for the visual display products offered today.

FUJI BATTERIES

Here at Fuji EnviroMAX, we are dedicated to setting environmental standards with the batteries we make. At one time, all batteries were made with mercury and cadmium, which are heavy metals. These heavy metals, along with other materials, have been proven to be harmful to the environment. Fuji Batteries decided they wanted to confront this environmental danger head-on, so they developed Fuji EnviroMAX to eliminate the use of materials like mercury and cadmium, which were hazardous to the environment.

Our Products

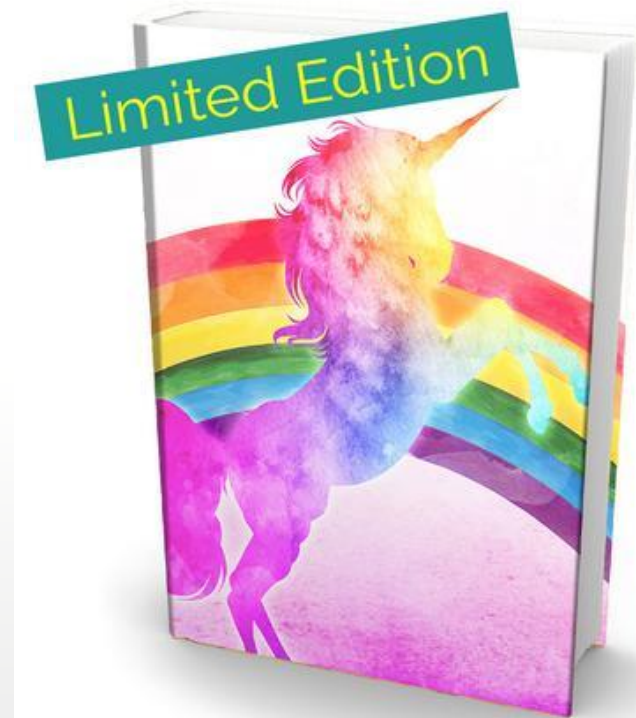

In 1993, a father with three young girls devised a solution to a problem he was being repeatedly confronted with: the constant re-covering of his daughters' school books. Believing there was a better, simpler and longer lasting way than using brown paper bags to cover those books, he got to work. And, after tearing through and sewing up hundreds of pairs of his daughters' dance leggings, until he got just the right fit, the very first product in our 'Sox'-themed line of products was born.
